SATUBDAY EVENING, MAY 15.

THE BAR'L. - The bar'l is a necessary adjunct of elections in England. The London correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing during the recent cappass says: "There is an electoral district in London, the details of whose daily expenditures for one party are known to me. There the Liberals occupy the public houses with committees at a cost of £200 per week. This, running through six weeks, makes £1,860. Last week the postage amounted to £100-a fair average-raising the amount in six weeks to £2,460. Newspaper advertising and placards raise it easily to £3 000 That is the mere basis of what has to be done for an ordinary capvass in Landon, one of the most common place, the candilates being of little distinction. It is about half of what the Liberal cardidates will have to pay for either their vietory or defeat. Their leading manager teld me their party expenses would probably amount to £8 000. The Tories will expend £10,000 on the same election. And these are the constituees s of the country. The prices have arisen above the average of fermer elections from two causes: First, the lack of any great cause or cry to raise outhusiasm above the plane of more party management; and, see ondly, the vote hurried through by the Gov eromeas, in the last hours of Parliament, exe pling from the list of corrupt practices at elections the conveyance of voters to the polls."
